Why This Role?

Investment management copy asks for something most copywriting doesn't: the precision of a technician, the clarity of a teacher, and the trust of a counselor, all in the same sentence. Writing regulated financial products at Callahan Creek and translating enterprise complexity at VML taught me exactly that discipline: being trusted with high-stakes material, and earning that trust back through the copy.

I'm drawn to this role because it brings all three together, at the scale and sophistication I find most compelling, for audiences who deserve writing that genuinely serves them. Fifteen years of building that craft feels like direct preparation for this one, and I'd love the opportunity to bring it here.
